Students take over city hall in 'Youth in Government'

Sixty-five students from Seaside, Marina, and Fort Ord converged upon city hall last week for a city-sponsored "Youth in Government" day which culminated with a mock city council meeting conducted by students.

The students came from Seaside High School, Monterey High School, Fremont and King Junior High Schools, for the learning experience which was initiated last year. They plan another all-day session May 28.

The morning was broken into four workshops on various aspects of city life, conducted by group leaders. But first, John Henry Rivers, dean of students at Monterey Peninsula College, addressed the students as a group in council chambers.

"Education doesn't just happen in the classroom," he said. "Education happens when you get involved. Your imagination and ideas can be very valuable; you shouldn't take your leadership responsibilities lightly.

"Responsibility starts when you get an idea about what's important to you, your family, and your community. It's extremely important that all of us become involved in the decisions that affect us."

Students then rotated through the various discussion groups during the morning. Ben Turner, a teacher at Seaside High School, conducted a workshop on social relationships; Gary Hill, the police community relations officer, conducted a unit on human justice; Ed Miller of the Neighborhood Youth Corps lead a discussion on jobs for youth; and Cleve Williams, the city's parks and recreation director, conducted sessions on youth in government.

In Turner's sessions on social relationships, students were given pencil and paper and asked to define Seaside's social problems in terms of "dogs," which was symbolic of blacks, "cats," representing whites, and "rats," for Orientals.

"Why can't they all get along?" Turner asked the students. "They are inherently enemies."

Student responses indicated that early conditioning in the home was largely responsibile for discriminating attitudes, and that peer-group pressure can operate to reinforce prejudices.

In the session on jobs for youth, Ed Miller pointed out the various features of the Neighborhood Youth Corps, which provides on-the-job work experience for pay for those members of low-income families that qualify. He also discussed other job opportunities and methods of securing employment with the students.

Police functions in the community were discussed with students by Gary Hill, as were governmental functions and their relationship to youth by Cleve Williams.

In the afternoon session, a mock city council session was held, with students assuming the roles of councilmen and city employes. One of the items on the agenda was a request of the actual Seaside city council for $200 in city funds to assist students in attending a California Junior State conference May 9-11 in Santa Barbara.

The mock city council decided to make the request of the regular city council; in the actual city council session that followed at 5 p.m., the students' request was approved.

In a portion of the agenda devoted to youth employment, questions were raised of city staff about what's being done, if anything, to assist students in finding summer jobs. Specifically, the ersatz city councilmen were concerned with jobs for middle-class youth.

"The city's not doing anything, directly," came the reply from the assistant city manager.

The mock city council scratched its collective head in befuddlement, having encountered one of the first real obstacles in the world of local government. The members also decided to schedule a hearing May 15 for the proposed city budget, after getting an explanation of the city's financial woes from City Mgr. Dudley Lapham.

A heated discussion ensued on the possibility of establishing minibike pathways within the city, but that item was referred to the planning commission for more study. A suggestion that the mock city council look into the possibility of establishing a YMCA for Seaside was referred to the city's youth commission.

Those playing roles on the mock council included Cliff Crivello of Marina, Mayor; Vivian Waldrup, Marina, vice-mayor; Maryann Moy, Marina, councilman; Joanne Taitano, Fort Ord, councilman; and Jackie Balesteri, Marina, councilman.

Students who assumed the roles of city staff were Wanda Capone Smith, Seaside, city manager; Nathan Johnson, Seaside, assistant city manager; Sharmon Davis, Marina, city attorney; Carmon Davis, Marina, building inspector; Genevieve Ingram, Seaside, finance director; Noly Roger, Seaside, fire chief; Steve Rawlings, Seaside, community development-planning director; Angela Burdix, Seaside, police chief; Jerry DelaCruz Marina, Public works director; Lenord Cyran, Seaside, parks and recreation director.

The students will return May 28 for another youth in government day at Seaside city hall.

City council continues program for low-cost rehabilitation loans

The city council approved a resolution last week authorizing participation in the residential rehabilitation loan program by Seaside residents, under the new community development block grant.

Seaside has received a letter of credit in the amount of $1.4 million for the first year of the program, which includes also the completion of existing urban renewal projects and related activities.

The new program simply means that the federal government is now dispensing a single, large grant known as the community development block grant, to the city instead of myriad smaller amounts, earmarked for specific projects.

The city now must arrange its priorities for expenditure of the funds under the new system. By approving the resolution at the city council meeting Thursday, the way is now clear for the continuating of the low-interest loans which have made it possible for many city residents to improve their homes.

City Mgr. Dudley Lapham said the city must concentrate the home rehabilitation loans in those areas of the city "where it supports other community development activities." He indicated that as much as two-thirds or three-fourths of the city of Seaside could be so designated.

In the past, home rehabilitation loans have been granted through the Seaside Redevelopment Agency; under the new system of dispensing federal fund to the cities, that agency now is directly under the aegis of the city council.

Councilman Oscar Lawson expressed a concern that the funds not be allowed to be used by "rip-off artists" and landlord property owners under the guise of rehabilitating their homes. He also said he was reluctant to get involved in a program if every expenditure had to be approved by higher federal authorities.

City staff replied that top priority under the community development block grant is given to the property owner who lives in his property, but that arrangements can also be made with low-income renters by the owner of the property for upgrading and rehabilitation.

"What's wrong if somebody comes in and upgrades the property and makes a buck in the process?" asked Councilman Joe Cota.

"The fact that we are trying to exclude the investor-owners causes me to wonder if we are saying we now have 100 per cent ownership in Seaside," remarked Mayor B.J. Dolan.

With the assurances of the city attorney and city staff that the city council could retain complete control over the designation of project areas for the loans, the resolution was approved.

The council also approved a resolution to participate in a three-year Federal Aid Urban System program designed to improve local rail or bus public mass transit systems in urban and urbanized areas. The approval of the resolution means that the city of Seaside will get $779,576.50 in federal funds, and will commit $160,423 in local funds for the designated projects.

These include such things as undergrounding utilities, improving the pavement, and generally upgrading transit system areas. The preliminary plans for the project are to be presented to the council later this month.

A remembrance of things past: Seaside twenty years ago

TWENTY YEARS AGO
From the Seaside News-Sentinel
May 5, 1955

Seaside is a car-crazy town. Everyone knows that. The kids help their big brothers to fool with jalopies by the time they're 10 years old. And almost all the younger men do a little racing--even if it's just spur-of-the-moment.

For that reason, the death of 19-year-old Richard "Rico" Whitton, son of Mrs. Beryl Sanborn of Seaside, in the hardtop races at Santa Clara Fairgrounds earlier this week struck everyone hard.

Pressure from mothers on young racers to quit has increased heavily, and several of Rico's friends have said they'd been shaken so much by the event that they planned a vacation from the sport.

(EDITORIAL)

Sometimes we almost think that as a city, Seaside has suicidal tendencies.

For what other reason would a new city appoint one after another of its officials, clerks, and other municipal personnel invariably from among those who live outside its borders?

It was bad enough when some of the original appointments to public office were of men and women who had been opposed to incorporation. This could be rationalized on the grounds that they had been "sincere" in their opposition, and would now be equally so in support. It seemed a bit queer to us to appoint enemies even before friends--but the story was at least plausible.

When this was followed by appointments of men to head departments from other cities, we again thought it unfortunate that there seemed to be a dearth of local talent.

When this pattern began to be completed by the appointment of secretaries from Monterey, Pacific Grove, etc.--in short, from every place but Seaside, we finally began to lose patience.

Frankly, we know that the feeling has grown up among the people of this city that "if you want to work for Seaside, you'd better move out of it first."

We think this is a dangerous course. People appointed from outside a city's confines usually are introduced by someone. With the best intent in the world, it's hard for them not to owe that someone a debt. And sometimes the best intent is not there.

Begin building on Ord Terrace School

Time for the ground-breaking ceremonies on the new Ord Terrace School in Seaside was set by school officials simultaneously with the revelation that the school district had received an allocation of $601,650 in federal funds for general school construction. The latter will make possible replacement of the present Seaside School.

Next Wednesday, at 9:30 a.m., Seaside city officials, PTA officials of this area, members of the Monterey District Board of Education, the high school district board of trustees, architects William Concolino and George Willox, as well as various dignitaries, will physically initiate the long-talked-about building in the Ord Terrace area.

Superintendent of Schools Glen T. Goodwillie has been quoted as saying: "If the work is not interrupted, it may be possible to complete the school by next September." The $576,144 structure, located in the eastern section of Ord Terrace between Ord Grove and Pine Avenues, is intended to provide relief to the most crowded elementary school on the Peninsula, Juan Cabrillo, where nearly every class is on a half-time schedule.

The new school will have forced air heat and bubble skylights. The skylights are the least expensive way of providing good lighting with little maintenance. Although used extensively in the East, bubble skylights have not been employed in this area, although they are said to be ideally suited here because of favorable climate.

Rummage Sale and Pet Show

The giant Rummage Sale and Pet Parade being held by the Seaside Chamber of Commerce this Friday and Saturday, May 6 and 7, will accept donations of clothing and pet entries until five o'clock this afternnon, it was announced today.

Large quantities of women's clothing, children's clothing, jewelry, shampoos and medical supplies, books, new and used furniture, have all been accumulated by merchants of the area for sale and bidding this weekend.

The affair, intended to offset a current running deficit of the chamber, will be held in the building that was formerly the Seaside Shoe Shop on Broadway, across from the chamber offices.

Farr Gives Statement on Election

A jubilant but exhausted Fred Farr, triumphant as the Democratic standard-bearer for the State Senatorial race in Monterey County over James Silliman, issued a brief statement to voters today in a special interview with the News-Sentinel.

Farr said: "I was naturally delighted with the results of the election, and I am looking forward to going to Sacramento. I intend to keep my one campaign promise for sure, which is that of doing a good job of representing all of the people of Monterey County.

"I was particularly gratified with the strong turnout of voters in Seaside. I will do everything I can to help Seaside while in Sacramento."

City to conduct comprehensive survey

The City of Seaside will be conducting a house-to-house field survey which will be providing the city with mid-decade census data.

The field survey will start Monday, May 5, at approximately 10 A.M. and will continue until the entire community is covered. There will be 10 community service advisors conducting the survey.

The first section will be that area north of La Salle, east of Fremont Boulevard, west of Noche Buena and south of Seaside High School.

Each of the interviewers will be carrying identification and, in addition to the survey questionnaire, will be distributing other community information and a brief outline explaining the purpose of the survey.

The information obtained will be treated as confidential. If any members of the community have any questions, they should feel free to contact the Community Development-Planning Department at 394-8531 - Extention 33.

Anyone wishing to contact the interviewers, to establish a callback time, may do so by calling 394-8531 - Extension 58.

Letters to the editor

Dear Editor:

The apparent indifference on the part of black parents towards the destruction of their children at Monterey High, in particular, and the Monterey Peninsula Unified School District in general, has prompted me to write this letter.

What is really despicable about this situation is the fact that the school district is using a black man as a tool for that destruction. This man has been delegated the authority to determine who will receive an education and who will not receive an education. Needless to say, he has used this authority to upset and destroy the lives of many black adolescents. Contrast the following cases if you will:

(1.) A white male student urinates in front of a classroom and is seen by a large group of students, including several females. It is also discovered that this student was intoxicated and in the possession of alcoholic beverages. The school's black administrator has the incident effectively hushed up with no disciplinary measure of any sort enacted against the student.

(2.) A black student is accused of stealing. The evidence against the student is purely circumstantial and there are no witnesses. The student is terminated from the school and sent to Cypress Continuation School.

(3.) Two black students are accused of possessing marijuana. A white student has been accused of stealing the marijuana from the two black students. It was also found, through evidence, that the white student had also stolen $10 from the black students. Though the marijuana was never recovered, thus destroying the case against the black students, the black students were terminated from the school. The white student, who should have been charged with theft, was asked merely to pay back the $10 he had stolen. He was not disciplined for his act of thievery.

Space does not provide me the opportunity to bring forth other such graphic examples of the systematic elimination of black students by the hand of a black administrator, but hopefully the above example will serve to open the eyes of black parents who as yet have made no attempt to correct this situation.

How many more young black lives must be laidwaste before black parents realize that black children also have a right to an education and that a situation whereby only "white-washed" blacks are allowed to hold positions of authority is contemptible, disgraceful, and must no longer be tolerated?

Continuation of world history

The concepts and forces developed during the 1940's to the present will be the next topic studied in Monterey Peninsula College's continuing Gentrain course titled "The Twentieth Century:

Part II." Classes will be held each Tuesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. with a one-hour lunch break. Gentrain courses are open to students who are just interested in learning about their world, said Robert Nelson, Gentrain director. No tests or papers are required under this option.

The years to be studied in part two of "The Twentieth Century" are from 1945 to 1975. "This is the beginning of a period of tremendous technological and scientific activity, spurred on to a great extent by World War II, which has made considerable changes in our lives," Nelson said.

but the council is not committed to any specific design merely by approving the resolution.

In a separate matter, the council approved proclamations declaring May 1 as Youth Day and the week of May 11-17 as National Transportation Week in Seaside. Another proclamation declared May as Poppy Month, as well as Older Americans Month.

Councilman Joe Cota questioned Mayor B.J. Dolan on the nature of mayorial proclamations, asserting that some which acquired official council sanction were nothing more than public relations gestures.

Walter Norwick, president of the Seaside Chambers of Commerce, asked the council for additional support of $6,000 for the 1975-76 fiscal year for chamber activities, specifically for television advertising "to promote Seaside." The funds, if approved, would be added to the current monthly level $1,000 which the city contributes to the support of the Chamber of Commerce.

And "Pat" Patterson asked the city council to make good on what he said was a promise made last year to senior citizens that they would be able to avail themselves of a commercial rate for cable television service in the city.

But Councilman Joe Cota said the agreement made by the council was that a commercial (and lower) rate was to be offered to anyone in apartment buildings where three or more subscribers all agreed to take cable television.

"Some apartment managers have refused to sign up," Cota said. "We have done our part of it."

Mayor B.J. Dolan said the agreement was that every renter in an apartment building must agree to the rates, or they can't be offered.

Councilman Oscar Lawson raised several questions concerning the city council's reversal of a planning commission denial of a use permit to Ocean View Cablevision to construct a 120-foot tower in Seaside.

"Is it possible the tower would be started before approval of the requirements on phasing?" Lawson asked. The city attorney said it would not be possible for the company to proceed in that manner.

Lawson also wondered whether there is any obvious benefit to be derived by the city of Seaside from having such a tower available for use by police communications. Dolan had asked at the last council meeting that such a provision be included, if the use permit were granted.

Dolan said his request for police use of the tower was not based on any specific expectation, but that it seemed an appropriate condition.

'I wish the community would become more involved with schools'

"We're in a crisis."

And as soon as he's uttered the words, Theodore (Ted) Cunningham of Seaside, president of the board of trustees of the Monterey Peninsula Unified School District, hastens to define "crisis."

"You know, the word 'crisis' in Chinese means both 'opportunity' and 'obstacle.' That's what we've got in the public schools today."

Cunningham, who was just elected president of the board two weeks ago, believes the educational system should somehow be overhauled to provide incentives for the best teachers to remain in the classroom.

Too often, he observes, the best teachers, like many others in our society who perform their jobs well, get promoted into higher-paying jobs where they are less satisfied and where they perform worse. The result is a general deterioration of the quality of education.

"We need to take another look at our system of compensation for teachers," Cummingham says. "All the action takes place in the classroom. But the problem is that people get promoted out of the jobs they like. The schools should provide incentives for keeping good teachers in the classrooms."

The Monterey Peninsula Unified School District faces another crisis of equal magnitude, in the form of financial and budgetary woes. Already certain for next year's budget (fiscal year 1975-76) is a reduction in income to the district of some $700,000 in a total budget of $22 million.

At the same time, enrollment in the elementary schools of the district is declining because of a reduced birth rate, thus diminishing tax revenue to the district. Faced with declining enrollments and shrinking incomes, the district is considering closing two Seaside schools and transferring students elsewhere.

The two schools under consideration for closing are Hilltop and Noche Buena schools; if closed, students from the former would be transferred to Larkin and Bay View schools, and from the latter to Manzanita and Highland schools.

Cunningham says the district could realize a savings of about $55,000 per year, per school if the two were closed. But, in a time of economic uncertainty and rampant unemployment, closing schools represents a moral dilemma, he feels.

The district is also losing state compensation under Senate Bill 90, the sweeping school finance legislation, due to a recent re-computation. And at least 80 to 85 per cent of district expenditures are for salaries, which means that the only way to make the necessary budget trimmings is by cutting back on salaries, Cunningham says.

TED CUNNINGHAM

Teachers in the district have asked the school board for an increase of 14 per cent on the average in salaries for the coming fiscal year, and classified employes have requested an average salary hike of 18.5 per cent. The teachers' request would represent additional expenditures of $1,682,500 next year; those of the classified employes would add another $893,000.

Clearly, something must be cut out of the budget somewhere if the district is to avoid bankruptcy.

"But in a time of high unemployment and inflation, how can we cut out salaries?" Cunningham worries. "It's put public education between a rock and a hard place.

"And so much of this is not within the control of the board," he adds, with exasperation. "We get so many mandates from the state, with no way to carry them out."

Cunningham feels that if the public were better informed about the nature and function of the school board, less resentment would be focused on the board.

"The school boards are accused of taxing people to death. But what people seem to forget is that we on the school board pay taxes, too. It hits us just as hard as it does them. And we're not getting paid for being on the school board, either."

Cunningham is a retired career Army man who now moonlights as an insurance agent. He got involved in the schools after his return from Vietnam in 1969 when his family settled in Seaside.

With five sons in the public schools, Cunningham says his involvement was inevitable.

"I was concerned that they get an education that was better than the one I got," he says frankly. "When I grew up in Chicago, I was told by a teacher that they get paid whether I learned or not. The problem there was one of disassociation--all of the teachers lived way across town and weren't involved with the community.

"That's not a problem here. In the Monterey Peninsula Unified School District, we're years ahead of other districts in innovative programs, in our ethnic balance, and in other areas."

Cunningham says he would like to see greater emphasis placed upon the fundamentals of education at all levels: the three R's that have been, he feels, de-emphasized recently.

"We've moved too far away from the basics. A kid needs to know phonics, for example. I believe motivation and self-image are important, too. I don't think you can go overboard on self-image.

"But you very seldom see kids with homework any more. And the lack of writing skills, and basic knowledge of English, is terrible."

Cunningham is very interested in improving his own level of usage of the language, and for that reason is active in the Toastmaster's Club, a group which emphasizes public speaking and oratory. Last week, he won the Toastmaster's International Area Contest in competition in King City. His topic? "The obituary of Free Enterprise."

Cunningham feels that pressures from big business and big government have combined to all but cripple the small, independent businessman, like himself, who is often given lip-service as the bulwark of free enterprise. That may be one reason for rising apathy, he believes.

"I wish the community would become more involved with the schools," he says. "We have a very low level of involved with the schools," he says. "We have a very low level of involvement. The parents need to know that we're there to serve them, but in order for us to do that well, they have to make their desires known."

Cunningham believes many of the problems that exist between the public schools and the community could be resolved with better communication. But he readily acknowledges, too, that communication is a precious commodity.

There is a need for a better ethnic balance in the district, generally, he believes, but Cunningham says he does not believe the ethnic balance of teachers and school employes in Seaside is too badly out of line with that of the community.

"The ethnic makeup of the school in Seaside doesn't reflect the ethnic makeup of the community--there are not enough Filipinos, for example. I don't think that we need more black teachers just in Seaside. We could use them all over the district."

SAFETY SCENE

Automobile Spoken Here

Lack of communication between drivers can be the cause of many accidents. Here's an introductory course in the automotive "language" of headlight flicks, horn sounds, hand signals, and even facial expression, that will add greater safety to you and your family's driving.

For example, suppose you have to stop suddenly and wish to warn the drivers behind you. Pump your brake pedal in a series of fast hard stabs to flash on your brake lights. Then, add a hand signal by waving your left arm in a wide vertical arc outside your window. Should you see such a signal from the car in front of you, relay it to the car behind you.

How to prevent tax bite.

Introducing the Crocker Retirement Bond: a plan to protect up to $1,500 a year from the tax man until you retire.

Let's say the company you work for doesn't have a pension or profit-sharing plan.

Unless you've got some other outside source of income, that means you're not covered for retirement.

Crocker–and Uncle Sam–would like to change that. With a plan that lets you save any amount up to 15% of your present salary (not to exceed $1500 a year) without paying Federal taxes on it right now. (State taxes are not yet exempt.) The plan allows you to save either a lump sum of cash or make small, comfortable periodic deposits. You don't pay tax on the interest your money earns in the plan, either.

When you retire, you're taxed only on what you take out–when you take it out. And, because you're no longer earning a salary, you pay at a much lower tax rate.

So really, you prevent a big bite now–while you're saving–by accepting a smaller bite later, when you need to spend what you saved.

The Crocker Retirement Bond is simply our name for the U.S. Treasury's "Individual Retirement Account." So we're not the only ones to offer it.

But where others require you to begin with a lump sum of $500 to $1000, Crocker has come up with a way that lets you start saving comfortably with any amount you want.

It's called our "Retirement Starter Account." And with it you can immediately enjoy both the tax benefits of a retirement plan, plus 5% annual interest.

Later, when your retirement fund builds up, you can elect to purchase one of our four higher-interest Retirement Bond options. Or you can choose to remain with your "Retirement Starter Account."

Of course, if you have a lump sum of $300 or more, you can bypass the Retirement Starter Account and purchase a Crocker Retirement Bond that earns an even higher interest rate.

And, if you're leaving a company with a large amount of cash from stock, profit-sharing or retirement programs, the Crocker Retirement Bond is a terrific way to shelter your capital from tax bite.

There's a lot more to tell you about Crocker Retirement Bonds. So we've put it all in a free booklet you can send for.

Better yet, come in and pick up a copy in person. And let a Crocker banker help you start preventing tax bite today.

I would like to know HOW TO PREVENT TAX BITE.

A POSSIBLE gravesight of the headless woman of Hunter Liggett Military Reservation is located at the top of a small hill. It can be viewed only from the ammo supply tower located to the right of the guard house along the road. The ghost has also been sighted on horseback along the crest of the mountains.

The headless horsewoman of Hunter Liggett

"This is private Jones. Hey Sarge, there's something out here at site 10. It looks like a headless lady on horseback!"

"What the hell are you talking about Jones?" Yelled the duty sergeant.

"I can hardly believe it myself," a scared voice uttered between heavy breaths of uncertainity.

Guard duty can be a little bizarre if you are at one of the many guard posts at Hunter Liggett Military Reservation at Jolon. The reservation, containing the highly sophisticated, instrumented field laboratory utilized by the Army Combat Developments Experimentation Command for field experiments, is situated in a remote, isolated area of the Santa Lucia Mountain near the Pacific coast. A solitary soldier at a guard post might find many thoughts entering his mind.

You are all alone. It's cold and the mist is moving in fast. The last rays of light are consumed by the blackness of night and the eeriness of it all seems to draw you into a shadowy world of surrealism. Or is it real...?

"There's something out there," stated PFC William Chant of CDEC's Transportation Company. "I saw it while at the ammo supply point in December. It was a female, I'm sure of that. And there was nothing from here up," (pointing to his neck). He referred to the headless woman as Cleora and said she rode on a horse along the crest of the mountains overlooking the tower.

Some feel that a person's mind is playing tricks on him or what he sees is really just an optical illusion. Others argue that the many sightings reported by soldiers make the story all too true.

Residents in the surrounding area say the legend of the headless woman originated more than 100 years ago. The majority of the stories and sightings by GI's can only be traced back six years. None of the "old timers" at HLMR have been there longer than that.

The legend concerns just one of the many Indian couples who lived in this region around the early 1800s. Often the squaw would sneak off to be with a white man prospecting for gold in the nearby hills.

One day the jealous husband caught them together and chopped the squaw's head off with an ax. He then buried her body in one grave and her head in another. It is said, according to one Indian belief, that a body must be buried whole before it can lay at rest. Now, during some early morning hours, the ghost of the headless woman is seen roaming Hunter Liggett, on horseback or afoot, searching for the grave that contains her head.

Some of the local residents explain the ghost as only a fetish thought up by Indians while under the influence of heavy yellow peyote powder. As for the descendants of tribes that once farmed this area, they wish not to talk about it at all.

Brother Timothy, at Mission San Antonio near HLMR headquarters, stated that four military policemen came to him three months ago swearing they had observed the ghost.

As their story goes, a sentry standing guard at the ammo supply point reported seeing a headless woman. Two jeeps of MPs were sent to the area to investigate. Upon arrival they gave chase to a woman on horseback but were unable to corner her and she vanished in the night.

Brother Timothy said there also have been reported sightings of her riding past the mission.

On another occasion, a guard was on duty in a small shack with a large glass window overlooking the Gabilan impact area where CDEC was conducting an experiment.

He heard a knock on the door. "I though it was the duty officer or the sergeant of the guard coming for the nightly check," he said. "I asked who it was but received no answer. I called again but still no answer, and all the time the knocking continued."

Art discovery visit scheduled locally

On Saturday, May 10, an "Art Discovery Day" will be held at the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art, 559 Pacific St., Monterey, Between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Volunteers representing the Bicentennial Inventory of American Paintings, a project of the National Collection of Fine Arts, will be listing paintings and watercolors created before 1918 in the first national census of American painting.

The National Collection of Fine Arts, a department of the Smithsonian Institution, is attempting to record every American painting produced up to the year 1914; in California the cut-off date is 1918.

"After long years of neglect, American art has come into its own. Yet it is essentially only the art of the older Eastern centers of population that has been critically explored, and it is the surviving art of those centers that makes up most of what is generally accepted as the nation's total artistic achievement. But American art is the product of the whole nation, and it survives all across the continent," officials said.

The inventory lists paintings according to essential identifying features, but it will not analyze, authenticate or evaluate individual works. It considers any painter substantially identified with this country, by birth or residence, an American artists.

Each painting will be recorded by artist, title, date, medium, dimensions, present ownership and location. Any owner's wish and right to privacy will be respected and protected; ownership and location of a painting will be withheld from the open record at any owner's request.

The data collected will be stored in computers and made available through a series of cross-indexed catagories: artist, subject matter and location.

Seaside High dancers to perform during May

The Seaside High School Performing Dance group is busy polishing dances to be performed during their three day tour of Sonoma County Schools in May.

Students have choreographed and costumed dance members to depict the mood of selected music. Included in a student dance workshop presented on April 16, were a jazz piece by Liz Simonson, "Hurry Tomorrow" by Rhonda Mosley and Regina Harris, and a duet to contemporary Swedish music by Linda DeAnzo and Anita Hart.

Vicy White choreographed her dance to Hubert Laws music, while Barbara Sooshas chose electronic music to project her dance.

The dance troupe, including members of the Kababyin and Mike Kings group, will perform four shows in three days of tour in May. The dance groups will also visit King and Fitch Junior High Schools and three elementary schools. A concert at Monterey Peninsula College on June 6 and 7 will climax the group's busy year.

Many shower curtains made of acetate, nylon or polyester need only a brief wash on the gentle cycle with warm or cool water. Again for freshness and brightness, use the bleach substitute. All but acetate curtains should be pressed with a cool iron while still damp.

Salinas Valley emerges as wine district

One of the world's major, fine wine districts is emerging in Monterey County's long Salinas Valley.

Just 2,200 acres in 1970, Monterey County plantings total 37,000 acres in 1975. These acres are mainly in Region I and II climate zones with some Region III, ideally suited to the growing of fine table wines. Virtually all this acreage is in the classic wine varietals of the world.

Although the Franciscan friars grew grapes in Soledad during the Mission period, they were not the fine Vitis vinifera types. The Salinas Valley became know as the salad bowl of the nation, not the wine bowl.

Noted scientific research in the 1930's indicated that Monterey County's valley climate was very well-suited to fine wine grape types. Not too hot, but sunny; cool afternoon breezes from Monterey Bay funneled down the long valley, lowering temperatures to optimum ranges. The average rainfall was not adequate, but dams had been built to hold winter rains in reserve.

Thus the Salinas River was controlled, opening the way to controlled rainfall with each varietal receiving the exact amount of rain needed. Pioneer plantings in the 1960's proved the truth of the scientific theory, and Monterey's vineyards began to grow. Monterey vineyardists and winemakers believe several factors enhance the county as true, fine wine area.

There are large parcels of continuous, gently sloping land for good drainage, whose general terrain and soil characterists (generally light and granitic) are most suitable for planting, cultivating and harvesting varietal grapes. The land is far removed from urban encroachment.

There are adequate supplies of underground water to augment the natural supply, hence each varietal can have exactly the correct amount to bring it to full potential. It is worth noting that much of this land was not taken from vegetable land, but had previously been used only for grazing purposes because of lack of water.

Degree days (the heat-summation index), are comparable to other fine wine areas of the world (Regions I, II and III). However, Monterey County's frost season is shorter in comparison, so there is little chance of killing frost either at harvest time or during the budding period. The fact that most of the vineyards are on slopes, rather than in the lowest part of the valley, also prohibits frost damage, for any cold air that does form tends to roll off the slope toward the valley bottom. Thus, growing seasons are long; varietal grapes can develop fully.

Monterey County tends to be less troubled by unseasonal, damaging rains. The wine-growing area averages only about 12 inches of rain each year.

Because the plantings are new, the best of modern technology has been wedded with the best of proved, traditional methods both in planting, cultivation, maintenance and harvesting as well as in wine-making procedures.

Because the area is phylloxera-free, many varieties are planted on their own roots. No rootstock is necessary. This allows each varietal to develop its full varietal characteristics.

Student newspaper wins an award

The Galleon Monterey High School student newspaper has been awarded a first place certificate by the Colombia Scholastic Press Association in the 51st annual contest.

The classification of entry in the contest is determined by the method of reproduction (printed or duplicated) the type of publication (newspaper news-magazine page in a community newsletter or departmental plublication) and the type and size of the institution.

This establishes the status of the entry with respect to others in the contest so that each is compared to schools of similar nature. The intention of the Board of Judges to provide positive constructive criticism. The G.S.P.A., in its 1925 prospectus set the aims of the Association which serves as the criteria for the annual competition.

"This Association dedicates itself to the task of maintaining the amateur standing of the student publication; of opposing the efforts of those who would make it an object of exploitation and an instrument of propaganda; of presenting it as an educational project and institution; and of keeping it advocational in tone and the outgrowth of experiences of those who produce it and are served by it."

Yosemite field trip offered through MPC

Monterey Peninsula College students and Peninsula residents once again have the opportunity to participate in the annual "Yosemite Field Trip" over the weekend of May 30-June 1.

Ken Petersen, engineering and geology instructor, said the trip covers the geology across California, Tuolumne Meadows, a hike down the Yosemite Falls Trail, Yosemite Valley, Glacier Point and Sentinel Dome.

During the Geology 117-195 field trip, students will be able to make field identifications of the geologic formations and to explain the processes that caused the existing formations. The trip will also help students become aware of ecological problems.

Students should prepare for the excursion by building up walking experience to 10 miles per day, as extensive hiking is included in the trip.

If time permits, the group will stop on the return trip and try a hand at gold-panning for coarse gold.

To receive the one-unit of college credit, students must attend two class meetings prior to the excursion. The classes will meet from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m Fridays, May 16 and 23, in Physical Science room 106.

The costs for transportation and two nights lodging, triple occupancy, is $25 per person based on current prices. Students must carry their own food for Friday and Saturday lunches. Other meals will be available at the Yosemite Lodge.

For further information or for space reservation, contact Petersen at 649-1150, ext. 330.

Venice featured in new film showing

A new film entitled "The Magic of Venice" will be presented in eight Bay Area locations during the month of May as the final offering of the current Explorama series, with Doug Jones appearing in person to narrate the two-hour color program. Performances include an 8:15 p.m. showing on Friday, May 9, at the Sunset Cultural Center Auditorium in Carmel.

Jones is, at 28, one of the youngest personalities in the professional travel-adventure film field and was recently awarded the "Film Lecturer of the Year Award" from the International Platform Association.

Why did Jones pick Venice as a film subject? "I like to do my film work in cities rather than trying to cover an entire country; and by working in a smaller geographical area like a city, it gives me an opportunity to really get to know the people. As for Venice, it is such a remarkable city, I just couldn't resist."

People play a very important part in all of Jones' films. A featured sequence in "The Magic of Venice" is the story of the Daponte family, which includes scenes of Mr. Daponte riding to work on the Traghetto, his wife shopping at the Rialto Market, and their children in school.

A major portion of the film deals with the miraculous things that are happening with such major ecological problems as air pollution, sewage, and rising water levels. For many years these problems seemed hopeless, but today, thanks to the Venetian people, Venice is being saved.

To dramatize these efforts, Jones filmed the cleaning of the Loggetta of the Campanile with pressurized glass beads, the complete rebuilding of the marble stairway at the Scuola de San Giovani Evangelista, the cleaning and restoration of Tintoretto's masterpieces, wooden statues being treated for woodworm, and the regilding of the Scala d'Oro of the Doges Palace.

What did Jones enjoy the most during his filming visit in Venice?" "I guess I am an incurable romantic; what I enjoyed the most was filming a sequence showing Venice through the eyes of romantic young lovers, Anna Vianello and Giovanni Moro."

Reserved seat tickets are now on sale at the Julia Marlow Box Office in Carmel and at Abinante Music Store in Monterey.

Cyclethon is designed to help the heart

A spokesman for the Central Mission Trails Heart Association today said that, like an "apple-a-day," a "pedal-a-day" helps keep the doctor away. Betty Nixon, Project Chairman for the Pacific Grove area said that the Heart organization has long recommended bicycling as a healthy form of exertion, especially when biking is part of a daily exercise program.

Mrs. Nixon made the remark in announcing that the Heart Association will hold a Cyclethon May 11 in Pacific Grove to raise funds for research, education and service programs, and to remind the public of the health benefits of cycling.

Mrs. Nixon said Heart Association volunteers are contacting schools in the Pacific Grove area and bike clubs to recruit riders for the planned Cyclethon. Participants will be given sponsor sheets with which to secure pledges of contributions to the Heart Fund from friends and relatives. The sponsor will agree to contribute a specific sum for each mile completed by the cyclist.

The Heart Association representative said the Cyclethon routes have been selected to permit the cyclist to complete almost any number of miles his endurance will allow.

Registration forms for "Cyclethon '75" can be obtained at local bike shops or by contacting the Heart Association office at 600 South Main St., Salinas.

CHILDREN SHOW GREAT INGENUITY

How ingenious can children be? Some entertaining answers to this question are being created by children all over America, who are sharing creative games, puzzles and projects with their family and friends. They're also finding out how to deal with such things as anxiety, expectation, fear and trust. At the same time they are discovering how a television program is put together. And, they are learning how to enjoy reading a newspaper.

The paper they're reading is "Around the Neighborhood," a new, nonprofit newsletter from "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," public television's critically acclaimed television program for children aged 3 to 8. In simple words and colorful pictures, it tells them about their favorite characters and guests who appear on the program. It provides highlights of upcoming shows, expands upon the education themes developed in the program, gives them a behind-the-scenes view of the studio, and presents lots of ideas for creating their own toys and games. An entertaining record or poster comes with every issue.

In each edition, sections are devoted to the parent, pointing up the object of each article, and its effect on the child in the hope of providing a way to better communication between parents and their children.

"Around the Neighborhood" has carried articles on the "Mister Rogers" children's opera, "Potato Bugs and Cows," and "Daniel, the Tame Tiger," a lovable puppet from "The Neighborhood of Make Believe." Opera singer Francois Clemmons, a frequent guest on the show, and astronaut Al Worden have also been featured.

SCHOOL'S OPEN

Summer school devoted to music planned in district

A school devoted entirely to music will be a new feature of the summer program to be held from June 15 to July 25. Music students in grades five to 12 will attend morning classes at Del Monte School to combine their talents in instrumental and vocal music.

The school, under direction of Alvin Mendonsa, is open to students who have had previous musical instruction, and is not for beginners. Classes will be offered in orchestra; intermediate and advanced sections of brass, strings and woodwinds; intermediate and advanced band; piano, guitar, and chorus. Beginning instrumental music will not be offered except for those students who are proficient in one instrument and wish to learn another.

Instruments should be provided if possible by the students; regular school instruments also will be issued. Transportation will be provided for most students; parents may have to assume some trips. Students should check bus schedules.

Other new activities and classes include animal behavior, chemistry laboratory, creative math, high school English skills, American literature, introduction to foreign language, conversational French, history of the Monterey Peninsula, dance and tumbling, basketball workshop, and boys' and girls' sports.

Elementary activities will include reading, mathematics, art, music, physical education science, health, language and culture of foreign countries. Special classes may be developed in individual schools centering around teacher, student, and parent interest. Students and parents should contact individual schools regarding each summer program.

Elementary summer school centers will be at Monte Vista, Bay View, La Mesa, Del Rey Woods, Noche Buena, Manzanita, Stillwell, Patton, Crumpton, and Marina Vista. Secondary schools will be at Monterey and Seaside High Schools for grades seven to 12. Students should register in classes according to the grade level they will attend in September 1975. Registration forms are available through individual schools or through the Summer School Office.

Metropolitan Opera star to perform

Metropolitan Opera star Frederica von Stade will perform at Sunset Center Theatre, Carmel, at 8 p.m. Sunday, May 11. The famous mezzo-soprano is being presented by the Carmel Music Society.

When the Paris Opera reopened in April of 1973 with a sumptuous new production of The Marriage of Figaro only one American was chosen for the star-studded international cast conducted by Sir George Solti - the 27-year-old Frederica von Stade. Miss von Stade won an ovation from the Paris opening night audience that included French President Pompidou and visiting dignitaries from all parts of the world. The newspaper France-Soir summed up her unanimous press: "The voice of an angel! Frederica von Stade led us to the supreme joy of pure music."

Her Paris Figaro ushered in a year which found Frederica von Stade one of the international music world's busiest and most eagerly watched young "comers" from San Francisco, where she sang Dorabella in the new Ponnelle production of Cosi Fan Tutte and the excruciatingly difficult title role of Cenerentola to New York, where she sang the role of Rosina in the Metropolitan Opera's revival of The Barber of Seville. She is, in fact, already booked well into 1975, including a Convent Garden debut as Rosina and her first Octavian in Rosenkavalier for the Houston Opera.

Miss von Stade's 1973 Christmas night return to the Metropolitan Opera in the florid, coloratura lead role of The Barber of Seville vindicates the young starlet's courageous stand when, at the end of the 1971-72 season, she reversed usual career procedure and took leave of the world's greatest opera house to broaden her experience on other U.S. and European lyric stages, vowing she would return to the Met only if she felt she "had the stuff" to become a more important artist.

In the interim she was to win ovations and critical raves as Cherubino and Sextus in Mozart's Clemenza di Tito in San Francisco. "Miss von Stade sang sensationally, Alfred Frankenstein reported in Musical America. "She was, in fact, the great hit of the entire season," and as Zerlina in Don Giovanni, Maria in the world premiere of Villa-Lobos' Yerma and one of history's rare mezzo-sopranos Melisandes in Santa Fe.

"She is the Melisande of one's dreams, childlike, vulnerable, exquisite," Martin Bernheimer wrote in the Los Angeles Times. "She sings the soprano role with ease, lightness and purity which belie the mezzo-soprano label. She acts with poignance predicted on simplicity."

In her initial three seasons at the Metropolitan, Miss von Stade chalked up a record as the opera company's number one singer of so-called "trouser" roles, her slender, youthful figure giving handsome credibility to Siebel in Faust, Nicklausse in Tales of Hoffmann, Hansel in Hansel and Gretel, Stephano in Romeo et Juliette and Cherubino in Figaro among other adolescent boy parts which great opera composers have assigned to female mezzo-sopranos.

In all, Miss von Stade had sung some 20 roles at the Metropolitan since literally landing with a bang on the historic stage for her debut on January 10, 1970, when she was let down from the flies in a basket as one of the Three Genii in The Magic Flute.

For ticket information for this concert telephone the Carmel Music Society, 624-2085, weekdays from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Season ticket holders who are unable to use their tickets are asked to notify the Society prior to the concert or the box office the evening of the concert so that the tickets may be resold to benefit the society.
